The research methodology. The author proceeded from the following methodological positions: understanding the nature, patterns, shapes, types, mechanisms of deviant behavior requires an integrative approach in the analysis of various theoretical concepts relative to a particular social phenomenon and manifests itself in appropriate circumstances, cultural development time and, in particular, this applies to the deviant behavior of the Armed Forces of Ukraine. From the perspective of an integrative approach factors, provocative, provoking, reinforcing or supporting behavior, deviant, complement each other.

Results. Established that the current state of knowledge of the problem of deviant behavior is defined by the divergent research approaches, is interdisciplinary (psychiatry, criminology, law, anthropology, ethnography, philosophy, sociology, psychology and so on) and yet the discussion. Unified systematization of behavioral problems so far not produced. Deviant behaviour can be seen with personal or socio-psychological approach.

The novelty. Found that deviant behavior varied according to the structure, types and forms. Under the structure of deviant behavior refers to the specific combination and dynamics of the structural elements of behavior that deviate from the norm. Types of deviant behavior are types of behavior depending on the characteristics of the interaction of the individual with reality, the mechanisms of behavioral anomalies. Forms of deviant behavior have common properties, which are the criterion of belonging to a group deviations.

Practical significance. The scientific study of the phenomena of behavior deviating from social norms, allows you to move from measures aimed at punishing the media for this behavior, to preventing. The solution to the problem of the study of deviant behavior of military personnel in a modern society requires a comprehensive attraction of theoretical knowledge.
