

Monetary economics as a form of the global economy modification

*I.V. Spivak, Ph.D. in Economics, Deputy Head of Division –
Head of Department of Macroeconomic Analysis and Short-Term Forecasting of National Bank of Ukraine
spivak@bank.gov.ua*

Research Methodology: Using the systemic and structural approach the process of updating of the global economy to the monetary economy was investigated and the peculiarities of its functioning were revealed. Using the economic and statistical methods the actual state of the global monetary economy was evaluated.

Results: The conceptual approaches to the determining of the nature of the monetary economy were analyzed. It was proved that the monetary economics is not a direct reflection of the monetary policy, and the last one, in its turn, is only the part of the monetary economy and institutional architectonics exchange mechanism.

Novelty: The nature of global monetary economics as a new modification of the global economy was revealed. The author definition of the “global monetary economics” as a new form of global economy, in the basis of which the currency sphere that has a significant impact on macroeconomic processes through the exchange mechanism through the use of its instruments within the country to ensure national economic interests was offered.

The practical significance: The theme of the article defines the new scientific problem of the study of the international economic relations, and the scientific approach to the determination of the nature of the monetary economy allows the use of study materials by the government while the ensuring of the national economic interests in the global economy and minimize the impact of external factors on the internal environment.