

Improvement of state regulation to ensure effective employment

*N.O. Haman, PhD in Public Administration, Associate Professor of Foreign Economic Activity Management and Logistics Department, “KROK” University
inwind@ukr.net*

Research Methodology. In the article modern methods of research have been used, such as: problem-oriented method – for scientific justification of ways to improve state regulation to ensure effective employment of the population; abstract logic – to summarize the theoretical foundations of public policy as a factor of socio-economic development of the country; analysis and synthesis – to establish a cause-and-effect relationships, causes and patterns of use of mechanisms of state regulation of employment.

Results. It was determined that one of the priorities of state regulation of employment is to improve the social protection of unemployed persons through the establishment of a system of unemployment insurance, which will increase the level of financial assistance to the unemployed, to strengthen the targeting of its receipt and encourage citizens, who have lost their jobs, to the active employment. In turn, the development of small business and the different types of non-traditional employment is an effective tool for reducing unregistered unemployment, the reduction of excessive employment, to improve the level of economic activity of citizens, as well as the integration of insufficiently competitive categories of the population in the labor force.

Novelty. The ways of improvement of state regulation to ensure effective employment were defined.

The practical significance. On the basis of the analysis of employment the ways to improve state regulation to ensure effective employment were identified.